

Papular Urticaria is a common allergic reaction to insect bites, particularly from mosquitoes, fleas, and ticks. It is characterized by raised, red, and crusted papules. The lesions are typically found on the face, arms, and legs. The reaction is usually self-limiting and resolves within a few days. Treatment is symptomatic and includes the use of antihistamines and topical corticosteroids.